LIBRARY SETS

OCT 10 1940

THE following remarks were published in 1812, with a view to afford information, previously to the renewal of the Company's Charter. This republication, at the present moment, is necessary to correct errors, which, though repeatedly exposed and refuted both in and out of Parliament* during the last twelve years, the machinations of faction are endeavouring to revive, and which, if carried into practice, must produce endless confusion, bloodshed, and misery.

INDIA.

THE events which are occurring in India involve so many topics of importance to the interests of this country, that the Public, it is conceived, will receive with satisfaction any statement which may serve to elucidate these interesting transactions.

The reference, which has recently been made to former transactions in India, “ as proving a systematic plan of territorial acquisition, inconsistent with the policy prescribed by the Act of 1793,” is calculated to mislead the judgment of many persons, generally entitled to respect and honour: this subject appears to require explanation, and it is proposed, in this tract, to consider,

1st. The intention of the Legislature in that branch of the Indian Bills, which respects "conquest, and extension of territory in India."

2d. The practice of the Governments abroad; the orders of the Government at home; and the opinion of Parliament respecting the same points, from 1784 to 1805.

3d. The positive enactments of Parliament upon the same points in 1800.

4th. The ultimate result of the augmentations of territory and power which have taken place in India since the year 1784, upon the strength and security of our Eastern empire, and upon the happiness and prosperity of our subjects in India.

1. The resolution passed in the House of Commons in the year 1782, and introduced into the India Act of 1784, and also into the Act of 1793, declares that, the "pursuit of schemes of conquest and extension of dominion in India, is repugnant to the wish, the honour, and the policy of the nation." This declaratory preamble introduces the regulation for preventing the commencement of hostilities in India, or the conclusion of treaties of guarantee involving the contingency of war, without the express command and authority of the Court of Directors, or of the Secret Committee.

At the period of time when this resolution passed, and even when it was enacted into a law, the situation of the native states of India, as well as of our several tributaries and dependancies, rendered it impossible to suppose, that the intention of the Legislature could be to preclude altogether any extension of territory, or any extension of the civil and military authority of the Company, over territories which we were already bound by treaty, or by positive interest, to defend.

The condition of the power of Tippoo Sultan,* of that of the Mahratta states, and of the Nizam† at that period of time (1784), appeared to afford just apprehension, that war might arise in India on grounds of justice and necessity, which might compel the Company to seek security in a reduction of the resources and power of some of those states : and it cannot be supposed, that Parliament intended to fix the exact limits of the dominion of the Company, excluding all reference to the conduct and policy of the native states of India, to the changes of power and interest which might occur on the continent of India, or to the advantage which might be derived from the success of our arms in any contest in which we might be engaged in the necessary course of events:

To forbid war absolutely was impracticable, whilst we were surrounded with powerful military states, whose policy might compel us to resort to arms; and to forbid any reduction of the resources and dominions of any state, which we might defeat in war, or any additional strength which we might be enabled to found upon favourable conditions of peace, would not have been consistent with the wisdom of Parliament.

No inference can be drawn from the letter or spirit of the resolution, or clause of the Act to preclude the extension of the British territories in India, by just and legitimate means, unconnected with schemes of conquest and irregular ambition.

The strict construction of this principle has been repeatedly argued in Parliament; and, in both Houses, the opinion has uniformly prevailed, that the intention of the Legislature was not to prohibit absolutely, either war or extension of territory in India, if either should become necessary to our security on the principles of justice.

The resolutions and the clauses in the Acts referred to preceding transactions in India, which appeared to the Legislature to have originated in an irregular spirit of aggrandisement; and although it is certain, that unjust wars, or exorbitant conquests would have been criminal, if no such principle had been expressly declared by the Legislature, it cannot have been deemed superfluous to declare the rule at a moment* when it was supposed to have been violated, and therefore to require additional confirmation, and a new sanction of authority.

2. Neither the practice of the government abroad, nor the orders of the government at home, nor the conduct of Parliament from the time of passing this resolution to the present moment, will warrant any other construction of the rule, than that which has been stated with reference to war and conquest.

The extension of the Company's territory, which occurred upon the result of Lord Cornwallis's war against Tippoo Sultan, under the treaty of peace in the year 1792, would otherwise have been deemed a violation of the rule prescribed by Parliament; but that war, and all its consequences, in the extension of territory, were fully approved.

The extension of territory which followed the conquest of Mysore, in 1799, would also have been condemned on similar grounds.

That conquest was the result of a just and necessary war; and the transfer of the enemy's dominions to our authority, although involving considerable extension of territory, was never deemed, for that reason only, to be inconsistent with the policy of the Act of 1793, but was declared to be justified by the same principles, which had justified the commencement of the war.

In the year 1789,* Lord Cornwallis, under the treaty of 1768 with the Nizam, obtained the cession of the Guntoor district to the Company. This transaction, as a mere accession of territory, would have been censurable upon the doctrine now maintained, but it was approved under the circumstances of the case.

The same observation applies to the arrangement concluded with the Rajah of Benares in 1795, by Mr. Duncan, under the orders of Lord Teignmouth, by which arrangement the Company's authority was extended over the province of Benares.

The state of the Carnatic, of Oude, and of other possessions of our tributaries and dependants, had long† been a subject of complaint and alarm. The Company had, in fact, supported these tributaries in their respective countries; and they owed the existence of their power, and must have owed the continuance of it entirely to the Company's assistance.

The administration of these countries was grossly abusive and injurious to the welfare and happiness of the inhabitants, and to the prosperity of the country. Internal disorder, and external weakness, accompanied by a rapid decay of the resources of these states, were the consequences of these evils.

The Company was bound by positive interest, and in many cases by treaty, to protect and defend these states, and was entitled to derive the means of defending them from the resources of the same countries. But under the mismanagement and corruption of the native governments, the means of supplying the defence of the country were declining, while the people suffered the utmost extremity of misery.

To extend the authority of the Company over these countries, would in fact prove no extension of territory, weakening the line, or impairing the means of our general defence; but an augmentation of power within territories which we were already bound to defend. Such an augmentation of power, so far from weakening, would tend greatly to secure and consolidate the strength of our empire in the East. Nor is it rational to suppose, that our means of protecting these countries could be diminished by the introduction of the civil and military authority of the Company into their respective governments.

It is evident that the opinion of the government at home has uniformly been, that the Company was bound to provide effectually for the good government of the possessions of our tributaries and dependants, and even to interfere directly for that purpose, in cases of exigency.

The extension of the Company's authority over the Carnatic, was always considered as a measure essential to our security in the event of war; the Carnatic was accordingly assumed both by Lord Macartney and Lord Cornwallis in time of war; and the assumption of the Carnatic in time of war, afterwards, became a formal article of treaty, concluded by Lord Cornwallis with the Nabob, in 1792.

✓ In the short war of 1799, Lord Wellesley did not assume the Carnatic, as he might have done under that article. But, in expectation that he would have assumed it, he received orders from the Secret Committee, "not to restore it to the Nabob," until a new arrangement for its government should be concluded.

It is therefore evident, that the extension of the Company's authority over those territories of our dependants or subsidiary tributaries, which we were bound by treaty or interest to defend, has not hitherto been deemed repugnant either to law or good policy.

With the Nabob of the Carnatic, and with the Rajah of Tanjore, subsidiary engagements were concluded by Lord Cornwallis in 1792, which eventually stipulated for a considerable extension of the authority of the Company over the territory of those princes, in the contingency of ultimate failure in the regular payment of the subsidy: but it never was contended, that in the event of such failure, it would have been inconsistent with the policy of the Act of 1793, to have insisted upon the rights of the Company to demand the execution of those articles of the respective subsidiary treaties, which, either in direct terms, or by manifest implication, entitled the Company to an extension of territory, in commutation of the subsidiary payments.

3. The following extracts from the Act* of 28th July, 1800, will explain the opinion of the Legislature upon this subject at that time:

“ Clause I. Whereas the territorial possessions of the United Company of Merchants of England, trading to the East Indies in “ vided, shall extend to and over the said pro“ vince or district of Benares, and to and over “ all the factories, districts, and places which

 “ nate thereto, and to and over all such provinces
 “ and districts as may at any time hereafter be “ annexed and made subject to the said Presi- “ dency of Fort William aforesaid.”

These extracts must be considered to afford a clear sanction of such extensions of territory
 as had been notified to the government at home at that time, and furnish a clear exposition of the intention of the Legislature by the Acts of 1784 and 1793. If those Acts had been intended to constitute positive prohibitions of any extension of the Company's territory in India, the preamble of the Act of the 28th July, 1800, would have been improper: it is evident from the words of this preamble, that the Legislature admitted the propriety of extending the Company's territory in India under certain circumstances, and in certain cases, notwithstanding the declaration of the law concerning "schemes of conquest and extension of

"dominion."

The words* employed in the latter part of these extracts also afford a further explanation of the intention of the Legislature respecting any extension of territory which might occur subsequently to the passing of this Act in 1800. So far from considering any such extension of territory to be illegal, the Act of the 28th of July, 1800, expressly supposes the case, that other provinces and districts may hereafter be annexed and made subject to Bengal, and provides for the good government of such new acquisitions. In fact, a part of the cessions from Oude was annexed to the district of Benares, and the remaining cessions from Oude, together with the cessions from the Mahrattas, were formed into another district. The whole was annexed to the Presidency of Bengal, and brought under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, by the operation of this Act.

4. The Company on various occasions, with the authority of His Majesty, had expressed great anxiety to commute the subsidies of the Carnatic and of Tanjore for adequate territorial security. It would be absurd to represent such a commutation as in any degree repugnant to the wish, the honour, or the policy of the nation, or to the spirit of the acts of regulation.

* "All other provinces or districts which may, hereafter, at any time, be annexed, &c."

On Lord Wellesley's arrival in India, in April, 1798, he endeavoured, in conformity to his original instructions from the Court of Directors, to obtain a commutation of this nature in the Carnatic. It is unnecessary to state the repeated and anxious efforts which Lord Wellesley made to effect this object, or to observe, that in pursuing it, Lord Wellesley followed the steps of Lord Hobart's government, which had proceeded also under the commands of the Court of Directors.

Lord Hobart and Lord Wellesley were equally unsuccessful; but their efforts have received the most unequivocal testimonies of official approbation; nor was an attempt hazarded to represent their endeavours for the improvement of the subsisting subsidiary engagements of the Company in the Carnatic as a systematic violation of the Act of 1793, although the success of those endeavours must have been accompanied by an extension of the civil and military authority of the Company over territory, not at that time subject to either.

In the settlement of Mysore, upon concluding subsidiary engagements with the Rajah of Mysore, Lord Wellesley declared to the Court of Directors in 1799, that his express purpose was to facilitate the direct control of the Company over the whole territory of Mysore, with a view to the more effectual security of the subsidy, and the good* government of the country. In fact, the territory governed in the name of the Rajah, was actually annexed to the Company's dominion by that article of the subsidiary treaty of Seringapatam, which empowers the Company, at any time, to assume the direct management of the whole country. But this treaty has not in Parliament been quoted to prove the existence of a systematic plan of territorial acquisition, inconsistent with the policy of the Act of 1793.

In Tanjore, a commutation of subsidy was effected in 1800, founded on the spirit of the Governor General's original instructions from the Court of Directors respecting the Carnatic; and accordingly, the territory of Tanjore was subjected to the Company's authority.

At the termination of the war with Tippoo Sultan (while hostilities still continued in various provinces of Mysore) in the year 1800, a new treaty of subsidy was formed with the Nizam. Adverting to the policy pursued by the Company since the Act of 1793, to the tenor of the Governor General's original instructions respecting the Carnatic, and to the experience of the evils resulting from the existing system of subsidy in Oude and the Carnatic, Lord Wellesley framed the subsidiary treaty with the Nizam, upon the principle of obtaining territorial security for the payment of the subsidy, instead of depending for the safety of those funds, on the precarious power and imperfect administration of an Indian government.—Can it be supposed, that such an arrangement was precluded by law, especially as the government at home was fully* apprized of the whole transaction?

The treaty with the Nabob of Surat, and the treaty with the Guickwar,† were founded on similar principles with those of Tanjore and Hyderabad, substituting territorial security for

* The Acts of 1784 and 1793, only preclude the conclusion of treaties of guarantee (involving the contingency of war), WITHOUT the authority of the government at home. In this case, the government at home was not only apprized of this transaction, but hostilities still continued in various parts of Mysore. In fact, this treaty with the Nizam in 1800, was merely an improvement of our existing engagements with that chieftain.

† A Mahratta chieftain, on the western side of Hindostan, whose capital is Baroda.

an engagement to pay the amount of the subsidy from the Treasury of the State. The right to conclude a subsidiary engagement with the Guickwar, was derived from that stipulation of the treaty of Salbye, which constitutes the Company to be the guarantee of the succession and government of the Guickwar state.

The new subsidiary treaty concluded with the Nabob of Oude, in November, 1801, rested on the same foundations, and effected a commutation of all the Nabob Vizier's engagements with respect to subsidy and aid in war, for a cession of territory.

✓ The treaty of Bassein (concluded with the Peishwah) proceeds on the same grounds. In renewing the ancient alliance between the ✓ Peishwah* and the Company, it cemented that alliance by a subsidiary engagement, and by a ✓ territorial cession, formed upon the improved plan of policy repeatedly sanctioned by the authority of His Majesty and of the East India Company, and already effected with other dependant states, in preference to that defective ✓ scheme of subsidiary alliance, which had produced innumerable evils in various parts of our dependancies in India; which, for many years, had constituted an annual theme of lamentation for all the governments of India, and for the Honourable Court of Directors; and the policy of which appeared to have been exploded by the deliberate wisdom and long experience of that body.

The whole course of the negotiations at Poonah, from the year 1798 to the conclusion of the treaty of Bassein, was regularly submitted to the Secret Committee.

The transfer of the civil and military government of the Carnatic to the Company (in 1801), was warranted by the justice and necessity of that proceeding, founded upon the forfeiture incurred by Mahommed Alli, and Omdut ul Omrah,* and upon the dangers which menaced the security of the Company's rights on the coast of Coromandel, in consequence of their treachery. The justification of this proceeding rests upon principles similar to those by which war is justifiable against any public enemy; and the extension of authority which accompanied the prosecution of a just and legitimate public right, cannot be condemned upon any principles correctly derived from the Act of 1793.

In prosecuting the just rights of the Company against the Nabob of the Carnatic, Lord

* Late Nabobs, or Rulers of the Carnatic.

Wellesley resorted to his original instructions from England respecting the Carnatic; and he framed the new settlement with reference to the acknowledged expediency of effecting a computation of subsidy for territorial security, and of rescuing the Carnatic from the evils of divided government and conflicting power, by establishing over that province one distinct authority in the hands of the Company, with a liberal provision for the Nabob and his family. It is impossible to comprehend the application of the Act of 1793 to any part of this transaction.

✓ The acquisitions of territory which were accomplished in India during Lord Wellesley's administration, proceeded either from the successful prosecution of war; or from forfeiture in consequence of the violation of dependant alliances; or, lastly, from the improvement of existing, or the formation of new treaties of subsidy and guarantee. The first description includes those provinces and possessions of Tippoo Sultan, retained by the Company under the partition treaty of Mysore,* together with the conquests made from Scindia and the Rajah of Berar, at the termination of the late Mahratta war.† The second description consists of the posses-

The records of the Company furnish sufficient evidence, that every extension of territory acquired under each of these classes, originated in principles, not only strictly conformable to the Act of 1793, but to the general maxims of justice and policy.

No extension of territory has been acquired otherwise than by the prosecution of a JUST and NECESSARY WAR, or of JUST and LEGITIMATE PUBLIC RIGHT: the result of these acquisitions has not involved the necessity of defending any territory, which had not previously furnished increased means of offensive war to our enemies, or which we were not previously bound to defend, either by the obligation of positive treaty, or of our own manifest interest.

Our means of defence in every case are now greatly augmented by the annexation of the civil and military government of the territories from which we derive the military resurces, applicable to defray the charge of their respective protection and security.

The result of the whole progress of these wars and negotiations will appear to be nearly conformable to the following statement.

1. The limits of the Company's civil and military authority have been considerably extended since the year 1784.

2. The principles of these successive extensions of power have been conformable to justice and good policy, and regularly brought under the consideration of the authorities at home; and sanctioned, either by direct law, or by orders from the Government in England, or by long acquiescence in the arrangements effected in India.

3. The magnitude of our empire in India has been increased by these events; but its strength and resources have also been greatly increased; our frontier in every quarter is improved, our internal government invigorated, and our means of defence considerably augmented.
